What is literacy learning?

At Kawasaki City Shiminkan (community centers), Japanese language classes for local foreign residents are called literacy learning. This name is based on the concept of international literacy activities by UNESCO and other organizations. According to UNESCO, literacy is useful for human liberation and all-round human development, and is not only about knowing letters.

Literacy is a fundamental human right. We believe that our activities support the independence of foreign citizens by working to eliminate the disadvantages and inconveniences caused by their lack of Japanese language skills. We aim to create a place for multicultural coexistence in the community where Japanese language volunteers and foreign residents can build trust and learn together by respecting and recognizing each other's native language and culture.
